History

What will you study in Year 12?

Students will study a unit on England: 1547-1603. This will give them the chance to explore the reigns of Edward VI, Mary and Elizabeth I, focusing on religious changes, unrest and rebellion, and the stability of the government. A particular focus is placed on the Mid-Tudor Crisis, the period from 1547 to 1558 during which England weathered numerous rebellions, coup d'états, and wars.

Students will also study France: 1774 to 1815, which will provide an interesting contrast, enabling them to investigate the causes and events of the French Revolution, its effects on French society and Politics, and the Napoleonic Wars and their effects. This will create obvious parallels to the Russian topic in Year 13.

What will you study in Year 13?

Students will study Russia: 1855 to 1964, focusing on the last of the Tsars, the background to the Russian Revolution of 1917, the overthrow of the monarchy during the Revolution, and communism in Russia under Lenin, Stalin, and Khrushchev.

Finally, students will produce a single piece of coursework of 4,000 words on an enquiry topic of their choice. This will be fully researched, planned and written up in the style of an undergraduate piece of work and is therefore highly valued by universities in UCAS applications as indicating students already have an understanding of University level work.

How will you be assessed during the course?

Assessment during the course will focus on developing the skills needed for their final examinations and their coursework. Students will be writing essays and source work answers that develop their explanatory and analytical skills, and their ability to communicate clearly and effectively by regular exam question practice, which are requirements of an A Level History answer.

External assessment;

The Tudors paper is 1 Hour and 30 minutes and consists of one 30 mark source question and one 20 mark essay question from a choice of two. It is worth 25% of your final mark.

The French Revolution paper is 1 Hour and consists of one 10 mark comparison of events question and one 20 mark essay question. It is worth 15% of your final mark.

The Russia paper consists of one 30 mark question comparing Historical interpretations and two 25 mark questions from a choice of three analysing a particular theme in Russian History. This is worth 40% of your final mark.

The coursework is 4000 words and makes up the remaining 20% of your final mark.

Where will this course lead?

History is a rigorously academic subject, which is highly valued by a range of employers. Many of the skills developed through the study of History are particularly useful for those interested in law, journalism and politics.
